

type

(the letter A)

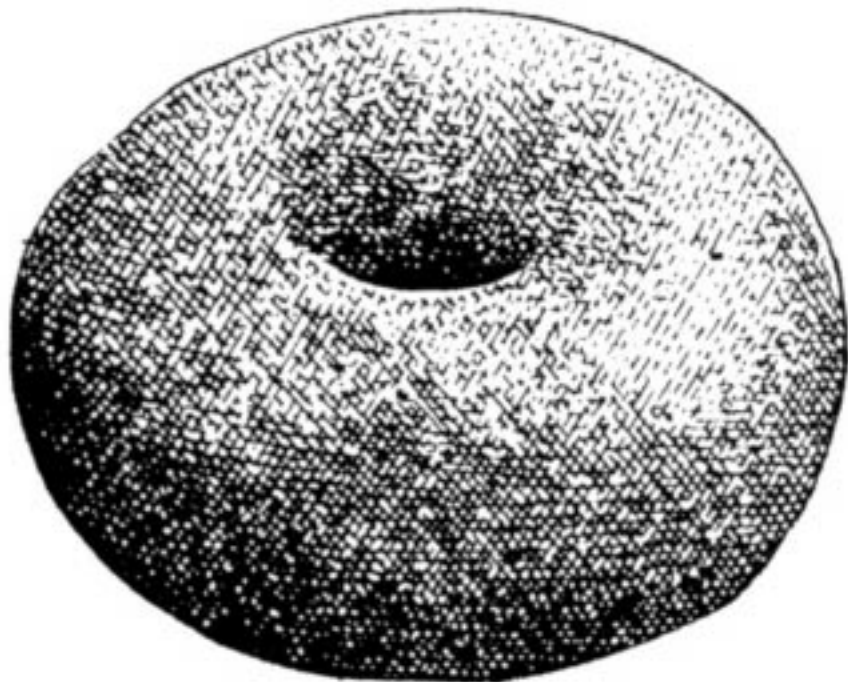

issue 1

March 1995

stories for reading

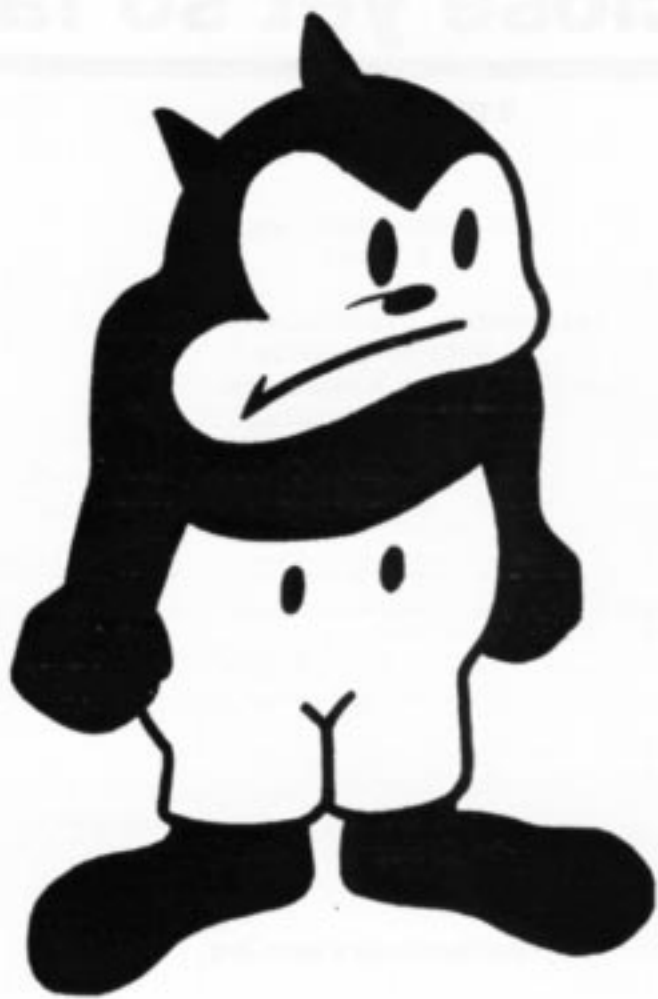

so close yet so far

a story of a donut

so close yet so far

a story of a donut

so close yet so far

a chocolate covered donut, jimmy had not been able to think of another thing all day. he liked donuts and adored chocolate and when the 3 o'clock bell rings he was going to head to the bakery to get one.

the bell sounded. jim sprang up and ran out of the classroom, down the hall, and after a short pause to drop his books at the locker out the door he went.

he arrived at the bakery to find that there was only one chocolate donut left. he ran up to the counter and half out of breath said "chocolate donut, please!" the old man behind the counter, who was tending to another customer, scolded him "you are going to have to wait your turn."

jimmy, after realizing how rude he had been, apologized and patiently waited. The woman ahead of him was picking out the morning's left over pastry for her cats. "josephen, and alex just love cheese twists. oh, and i'll take that chocolate donut for lester." she said. jim's mouth dropped open. he could not believe that after all this time, the entire day, that lester (the cat) was going to have his donut.

Type (the letter A)
issue 1

© 1995 helplessly stupid lit.
product of iEDM
all rights reserved
printed in Texas

donut
~~love~~, many a splendored thing?